Moscow, January 1.

ON the 29th past, their Czarish Majesties made their publick Entry into this Capital, having done the like this Day Twelve-Month. Their Majesties being arrived near the City, they were saluted by a general Discharge of all the Artillery; first came the Czarina attended by a Troop of Horse riding by her Sledges, followed by her Ladies, all her Officers, and Pages; next came six of the Czar's led Horses, richly caparisoned, followed by a Kettle Drum, five Trumpets, and eight Musicians all on Horseback; a Company of Horse-Grenadiers with red and white Ribands on their Caps preceeded by the Silver Key lying upon a rich Cushion, presented by the Governour of Derbent to the Czar; the Gentleman of the Horse, followed by four of the Czar's Pages: The Czar on Horseback at the Head of a Troop of Horse which returned with his Majesty from Persia; all the Troops of the Garrison in this City closed the March. The Cavalcade arriving near Prince Menzikoff's Hôtel, a second Salvo was made of all the Artillery: The Czar alighted there and dined with the Prince, but the Czarina continued the Procession to the Triumphal Arch erected by the Clergy last Year, and were again assembled there to receive and congratulate her Majesty; they presented to her likewise several Sorts of Refreshments, and then a third Salvo of the Artillery was made, and after that succeeded a fine Consort of Musick. Abundance of the Inhabitants presented Bread and Salt to the Czarina in Token of their Joy. At Three in the Afternoon, the Czar re-joined her Majesty under the Triumphal Arch, and at his Arrival a fourth Salvo of the Artillery was discharged: From thence their Majesties went directly to their Palace of Preobrassinki and intend to reside there during their Stay in this City. The Duke of Holstein complimented their Czarish Majesties near the Triumphal Arch; the Czar alighted from his Horse and embraced the Duke. The Dowager Czarina, and her Daughter the Dutchess of Mecklenberg, together with another of her Daughters, also complimented their Majesties near the same Arch. No new Triumphal Arches were erected on this Occasion, but those which were made last Year have been new painted and adorned with fresh Devices: On one side of that where the Clergy received their Majesties was represented Queen Esther before the Throne of King Ahasuerus, and that Monarch extending his Sceptre towards her; on the other, the Governour of Derbent was represented delivering the City Keys to the Czar; over the City two Fames were hovering, one Aged, the other Young. The elder Fame, held a Buckler, and the Picture of Alexander the Great, and represented to be proclamining the Praises of that Conquerour; the younger, seemed recounting to the elder the marvellous Exploits of the present Russian Monarch. Under Alexander's Picture was wrote in Capitals, Fama Vetus; under the Czar's, Fama Nova; and beneath the City of Derbent, this Latin Verse - - - -

Struxerat hanc fortis, tenet hanc sed fortior alter.
i. e. A great Hero built this City, but a greater keeps it.
